Steven's practice focuses on representing workers injured on the job in claims before the Industrial Commission and other injured individuals in claims in both state and federal courts. He started his career as an assistant attorney general defending the state of North Carolina before deciding to join Martin & Jones out of a desire to help hard-working men and women who have suffered life-changing injuries either on the job or due to negligence.

Steven understands how difficult it is for people who are injured, out of work and concerned about providing for their families while receiving medical treatment, to get their lives back. Steven takes representing these folks to heart and works diligently and urgently to obtain the maximum recovery and benefits allowed under the law.

Steven graduated from Wake Forest University School of Law. While in law school, he was recognized for earning the highest grades in his class in both Workers' Compensation and courses in North Carolina product liability law.

Prior to law school, Steven attended Lenoir-Rhyne University, earning an undergraduate degree in Political Science. During his time at Lenoir-Rhyne, he was a member of Pi Sigma Alpha (the National Political Science Honors Society) and the Deans' List. Steven also spent a semester in Washington, D.C., where he interned in the office of Congressman David Price.

Steven is a Raleigh native. Outside of the office, he enjoys basketball, cooking, and watching the Demon Deacons.
